This is what you'll ask Peter. If you already know the answer, proceed to the next step. If it's a question you don't know the answer to, you can ask them for the answer, telling them that if they say the question and answer out loud, Peter will hear them with his psychic powers. If you don't know the answer, you won't be able to follow the next step, and Peter will answer with a very generic statement like "You shall not doubt of me at all, keep trusting on me and soon I'll answer." In other words, the trick won't work! In the petition box, press . and then type the answer. Pressing the period key will clue the site into the fact that you're typing the secret answer, causing each letter you type to appear as part of the phrase, "Peter, please answer the following question." Since, for this example, the question will be "Why is wikiHow the best website?", we will now type, ".Because it is a group effort" into the petition box. Press . repeatedly until you reach a logical break in the automated question. In our example, the secret response only takes us as far as "Peter, please answer the foll"; to get the phrase to say "Peter, please answer the following," simply press the period key five more times. The extra periods will not appear in your secret answer. Note that the full question reads "Peter, please answer the following question" – though you're welcome to stop anywhere that makes sense before that. Press : to move the cursor to the question box. This is essential because it signals you're your secret answer is done. Moreover, without the colon, you will not be able to proceed to the question box. Type the question normally. Press ? to submit the question. You may have to agree to a liability release before you can move to the next step. Watch for Peter's answer. He should display the response that you typed. If your audience doesn't know that you typed in the answer, they will be flabbergasted. You can probably keep them amazed for quite a while as long as they don't start paying close attention to what your fingers are actually typing. Template:Video:Use Peter Answers You can also tell your viewers to stare at the screen so that they can correct any spelling errors that you might make. Peter will accept and display answers that are longer than the petition phrase, but it will be pretty obvious something is up if you continue to type after the screen displays the entire petition phrase. Nothing more will show up once you've reached the end of the phrase. Peter is only as accurate as you are, so if you enter a typo, Peter will answer with a typo, and people will get suspicious pretty quickly. If you think you made a mistake, you can backspace and start again at any point. If you delete all of what you entered, press Clear and start over; remember to enter a period again to signal to Peter that you're entering the answer. (Note that deleting everything you entered is not a good idea because people will wonder why you're erasing a perfectly good petition.) If you're typing a short answer, you can save time by completing only the shorter petition phrase ("Peter:", "Peter, please:", or "Peter, please answer:"). Also, do not type . twice! As soon as you type a colon ":" the cursor will automatically jump to the question box, even if you haven't finished typing out the petition. This will likely ruin the illusion, so don't accidentally type that colon too soon. If somebody asks a question that you don't know the answer to, it is best to just type "I cannot answer the following question." When you're typing your answer in the petition box try not to make any mistakes, and try not to use the backspace as it could potentially ruin your answer. When you're typing in the petition box, it helps to NOT look at the screen, because it can throw you off and make you forget what you're typing. Instead, look down as you type the answer. Only look up after you've typed the period to check how much of the query is finished. We are not permitted to choose the frame of our destiny. But what we put into it is ours. Peter Answers has an incredible array of AI capabilities that taps into the deep web, social networks, and chemtrails in order to feed you back information that you never knew was even publicly accessible. It's both fascinating and scary at the same time. It seems to work particularly well when somebody else is asking the questions for you. It really gives Peter time to internally process all of those 1s, 0s, and who knows what other numbers and characters are available in the dimension that Peter operates in. It's amazing to watch. You ask it "What dog food did I eat today?", and it can tell you exactly which brand of dog food you ate, and tell you to seriously consider your life choices. Peter is, in many ways, a mentor. Someone that you can go to with questions, and you know you'll get back brutally honest answers. You'll reflect, think, and possibly cry at the responses. All in all, a great time will be had by all. Though… Peter doesn't seem to be very good at responding when you're asking him questions by yourself. He might not even be able to tell, which brand of dog food you ate, which I think is pretty outrageous. I assume Peter is one of those type of people that works well in a group but not on a 1 to 1 situation. Maybe he's a little insecure. Who knows. Anyways, we at Stuff On The Internet.com interviewed 25 people to uncover the true nature of Peter, and to figure out what his twisted intentions are with your trivial, potentially embarrassing details that only you care about. How does Peter Answers work? Oh, a good question. Since you've phrased the question in a different way, I'll answer it differently. Peter Answers summons it's mystical power to come up with a bunch of canned responses. Much like a regular tarot reader would do (sorry if you're a tarot reader and you actually do have mystical powers). Is it REAL? It's a tarot, except, it's virtual. By virtual, I mean it's not real. Just like regular tarot readings. Sorry again to tarot readers that might be reading this article. But… You can go one step further! The virtual tarot 'Peter Answers' has been around for many years, and I still come back to it again and again to fool friends. It always gets some great laughs and I've noticed that really smart people often start overthinking this and can't figure out the simplicity of it all! Peter answers all comes down to a little keyboard trick. You hide the answer in the petition field! But how do you do this?! In the Petition field you're supposed to type "Peter please answer the following question" What your unsuspecting friend doesn't know is that pressing the PERIOD KEY will allow you to enter in the answer to the question, while it will look like you're still typing in the "Peter please answer the following question" petition. Try it yourself, if you press the period key in the petition textbox then you could mash the keyboard and it will still write "Peter please answer the following question"! Pressing the period key a second time will complete your answer, and you will go back to typing normally into the text box. This works really well if you're a fast typist. Though even if you're typing painfully slow, people still often can't figure out what you're doing! Just make sure that you ask the question and figure out an answer before you complete the petition. How does Peter Answers know my information? If you got to this question first then you definitely skipped the first part of this article explaining how it works, and I commend you for your lack of patience. What are the best questions to ask Peter Answers? Assuming that you, by this stage, realise that Peter Answers is not sentient, here are some great questions that you can ask it to fool or freak out your friends. Here are some examples: Peter, who I standing next to me? Peter, how many fingers am I holding up? Peter, who did sleep with last night? Peter, what happened on (relating to something embarrassing that only you and your friend know about)? Peter, what's my birthday? Peter, who's my crush? And there you have it. Those are some examples. You're probably a lot more inventive, and you can probably think for far more better examples than the ones above. If you think so, then fine, be that way. Or, you could add a comment below, and show me why my questions above are totally lame. Conclusion I hope that you've learned something very valuable in this article. Peter Answers is something that you can come back to again and again and fool your friends. Or if you have a goldfish memory, and you can only remember the previous 3 seconds. You could possibly be continuously fooling yourself. And if you ask me, that's something you should think about. Peteranswers.com is a website that you can use to trick your friends into believing that the website can guess the answers to the questions you ask it. To use peter answers, in the petition box press the "." (period) key then type the answer of the question you are going to ask. To everyone around you it will look as if you are typing "Peter, please answer" if your answer is shorter than "Peter, please answer" then you press "." again and finish the petition (Same thing if your answer is long with Peter, please answer the following question). Then, add a colon to the end of the word "answer" (or "question" depending on how long your answer is) and type in your question! Your friends will be amazed. When they try to type in a question, Peter will say something like, "You do not believe in Peter" and won't give them an answer.Peter answers won't work for me because I don't believe in the website.by Jeff_W January 14, 2008Get a Peter answers mug for your barber James.Jul 7 trending
